

A detailed scanning electron micrograph of a coronavirus particle, showing its characteristic spherical shape and the dense layer of surface spikes (glycoprotein spikes) that give it a crown-like appearance. The particle is rendered in a light blue/teal color. In the background, numerous red blood cells are visible, appearing as reddish, biconcave discs, providing a sense of scale and biological context.

A detailed 3D rendering of a coronavirus particle, characterized by its spherical shape and numerous surface spikes (glycoprotein spikes), is the central focus. The particle is shown in a light blue/teal color. Surrounding it are numerous red blood cells, depicted as biconcave discs in a vibrant red color. The background is a soft, out-of-focus mix of these colors, creating a sense of depth and biological context.
